I started at first grade, and was in the regular program, which wasn't that hard. The most important thing is for the player to know how to play, which is the most important part. I got home, and didn't find anyone, so I called my sister, and she came over. I'm really glad to finally have you here. I took a deep breath, grabbed my purse, and opened the door to the dressing room. It was like a maze inside, with doors everywhere. I couldn't help but stare at the piles and piles of shiny dress clothes. The lights were still on, but other than that, the place was dead silent. I wandered past half a dozen closed dressing rooms, which only made the silence in the larger room all the more ominous. I couldn't wait to find my sister. The dressing room was bright and sunny, like the room from a restaurant. The walls were a warm, tawny color, and the floor was clean, polished wood. Each piece of furniture in the room was made to look like the parts of a dresser, so the whole room reminded me of a fancy, crowded dresser. I walked through the dressing room, and walked into a room that was even more grand. The walls of the room were made of the same warm, tawny color as the dressing room. The floor was a smooth, shiny surface, so you could tell the whole room had been coated by some kind of sealant. I looked around, and there was a small closet just like the one in my dressing room. I went to it and took out my things, the way I always do. I found my favorite jeans, black, fitted, and comfortable. I found my favorite T-shirts, pink, with little hearts on them. I found my favorite hoodies, dark blue, with cartoon penguins on them. I found a black bra, a tight one. I found my favorite sneakers, a comfortable pair of sneakers, the ones I always wear. I found my black jacket, the one that always reminds me of superheroes. I put my backpack on the closet shelf. I took off my shoes, and hung them on a rack near the closet. I put my wallet on the dresser. I put my cell phone on the dresser. I took out my laptop and my phone. I took out my other purse
