Membrane dynamics and calcium signaling in platelets. Platelets have a short lifespan in the circulation, but their lifespan is extended by binding to the vascular wall. This adhesion is mediated by a number of adhesive ligands in the plasma, particularly von Willebrand factor (VWF) and collagen. Platelets also bind to each other and produce their own VWF via shedding, and this too increases their lifespan. Both VWF and collagen bind to their receptors via their glycoprotein (GP) Ib-IX-V complex, which is itself anchored to the membrane via GPIb. The glycoprotein Ib (GPIb) complex has been shown to interact with other platelet receptors including GPVI, TxA(2) receptor, GPIIb-IIIa and GPIb-IX-V, which further enhances the signaling capacity of platelets. The signaling pathway which is triggered by these events is best studied in the aggregation process. In this case, a conformational change in GPIb releases an unknown ligand which interacts with GPVI
