My Heart and Other Black Holes is a 2016 novel by Jasmine Warga. It won the 2016 Special Mention Prix France International du Roman Noir in the 2017 awards for fiction. and debuted on the New York Times Best Sellers List for Hardcover Fiction. Plot The novel is set in New York City and follows Grace, a young woman who lives with her mother, Rachel, a white lesbian painter. The two live in New York City's Harlem. Throughout the novel, Grace and Rachel discuss the similarities in their mother's and Grace's ancestry. They, along with a group of friends, go to visit an old relative in upstate New York. The group returns to New York for the fall school semester and considers returning to visit their old relative. After weeks of living at home, Grace decides to move out. Rachel does not approve of her plans, and eventually is evicted by Grace. Rachel is devastated, as she has been doing well in her life and the eviction prevents her from visiting her old relative in the hospital. Grace finds herself homeless and living at the Chinatown bus terminal with a homeless man named James. Their time together becomes romantic. After failing to acquire an apartment with a roommate, Grace moves in with James, who is a Russian man. James encourages Grace to find a lover, but Grace is unsure. When her Aunt dies, Grace moves in with her in New Jersey to help Rachel with the funeral arrangements. Grace and Rachel visit New Jersey. At the funeral, Grace notices some similarities between Rachel's family and James' family, which causes Grace to feel uncomfortable and left out. She plans on going back to live with her mother. However, she learns that she is being put in an old people's home. Grace discovers that James was lying about his being a Russian man. Grace and Rachel find their belongings packed and sent to her mother's apartment, where she is instructed to move out immediately. Grace is distraught and confused. She returns home to New York City. A friend who is now in college arranges for her to move into his apartment. While there, she talks to a man at the bars she meets at. He offers to share his bed, but Grace refuses. She starts to miss her mother. At a local bar, she meets a woman named Violet, who is a poet and artist. Violet and Grace start a relationship, and they try to convince Grace's mother to move in with Grace. Grace's 2d92ce491b
