Don't Take Our Word for It: This is Who You Should Be Listening To In college I was a speech major and regularly attended weekly talks and lectures given by incredibly charismatic and extremely intelligent people, like Robert J. Shapiro, the incomparable Bertrand Russell, and C.S. Lewis. I remember one particular time, I was sitting in the student union with my roommate and a couple of her friends, and there were people around us who were eagerly waiting to get into the lecture. "What are you doing sitting around in here?" one of the girls asked us. "This is the place to be. This is the place to be," I told her. In all honesty, I didn't think I was any different from them. I was extremely socially awkward and only came out of my shell when it was absolutely necessary, like to get my paycheck. I told myself I was better than these people. I was more than them. I was a student and these students weren't. One of the speakers gave a talk, a talk so fascinating it was guaranteed to capture the attention of the average student. He told his audience, "I've studied with C.S. Lewis, Bertrand Russell, and even Carl Rogers. I'm a professional speaker, a masterful presenter, and I've studied human behaviour extensively. I know what makes people tick. I know how to manipulate them. I'm going to tell you how to really be an actor." I was, to be frank, incredibly tempted to turn around and say, "Me too
