To elaborate, here is my case: I have a jsp page (let's say it's pageA) which is located in the root of my application I use ant to copy this jsp into the target/classes/main/webapp/pages/ folder After copying, this jsp is always reloaded when I go to (no matter if this pageA is located in src/main/webapp/pages/, src/main/resources/static/, etc...) The issue comes when this jsp should redirect to another page located in the root of the application (src/main/webapp/pages/whatever.jsp). When I use redirect, the status code I get is 302. When I use forward, it works like a charm. It shows the pageA and redirects to the url I specified. If I use a relative path, the status code is always 302 (because it is not found). That leads me to think that the problem might be because the second jsp is loaded with another context (probably the one used by the app). I did not specify a context path in my servlet container because I am not sure where it is going to look for the jsp. If it matters, I am using Tomcat 6. Thanks for your help. A: It looks like you're running the container with a configuration specifying that it should search the webapps directory before other locations. Have you done a search for a file called pages/whatever.jsp in the directory that contains the webapp? You're getting redirected because your webapp doesn't know about the file, and isn't looking for it in the appropriate directory. You can change the configuration for the container by editing the catalina.properties file found at catalina.base/conf/catalina.properties. There is a value for the

I can smell the smoke, the clouds in the sky. I can taste the cold wind. I can feel my body melting as I sit on the stool, waiting for the time to pass. I can hear your eyes filling with tears, I can feel your arms long the window, running the length of the sky. I can feel the thought, frozen in your head, wishing you were flying in the air, without a pilot. I can feel my whole body shaking, as I sit here, knowing you don't care, your head bowed down, hoping I wouldn't notice, as I start to close my eyes. I can hear the laughter, I can feel the air being sucked out. I can feel your hands, shaking, they have been holding you up all the way, now they are filled with ashes. I can feel the tears drip down my face, into the cold concrete of the windowsill. Your eyes are burning, from the ash, you are not screaming or crying out, I can feel your strength gone, your 2d92ce491b
