More than seven in 10 borrowers (71 percent) are holding mortgages that are underwater, meaning their home values are lower than their mortgages. This category includes borrowers that are making payments to cover their loan but still owe more on their homes than they are worth. A third of these borrowers, or 744,000 households, were current on their mortgages but are underwater because their property taxes have outpaced their loan payments. If these borrowers stopped paying, it would put downward pressure on property values and put additional strain on lenders. The delinquency rate rose to 7.6 percent, compared with 6.7 percent in the third quarter of last year. A recent Australian study found that people who had a pet cat were 70 per cent less likely to develop dementia than people without a cat. The link between Alzheimer's disease and dementia is well documented, and growing evidence suggests that that the risk is related to the activity of a particular type of immune system cell. People who live with cats are known to have higher levels of this type of immune cell – known as T-cells – in their blood. Dr Jodi Rose, who conducted the study with colleagues from the Florey Institute, said cats may protect people from Alzheimer's. "The fact that this effect was also found in those living with a cat was of particular interest because we know that Alzheimer's disease is more common in older people and people over 65 are more likely to be living with cats. "It also demonstrates the benefit of getting a pet, which we know of course is good for people's mental wellbeing and social wellbeing. "So, having a pet may reduce the risk of developing dementia," Dr Rose said. The study was conducted in Australia but the researchers said it would be interesting to see the results replicated in other countries. Some people are more prone to developing dementia than others.
