She said she would have been ready to leave the country sooner if she had been told that such a move would be safe for her as a woman. “I felt I didn’t have any right to get involved, because I was a woman and I had no business there. Also, I was afraid to leave China. And there was no language barrier, only the language of money.” Nirdosh said that, after her success in Beijing, she was offered $2.5 million for a similar task in neighbouring Hong Kong. Nirdosh told the paper that she thought the money was bribes, though she didn’t know what level. She said she fled to Taiwan, where she was given a stipend of about $1,000 a month. A friend in China looked after her welfare. The paper spoke to a female doctor in Beijing who described herself as a “happy” defector, who said she was well paid by NOS to bring in wealthy clients. “If I were a migrant worker, I wouldn’t survive,” she said. “We were paid by management at NOS, so the company pays the medical fees,” she explained. “One boss alone was offering about $10,000 a month.” She described NOS as “one big family” and said that her team was ba244e880a
