License: Public Domain Q: If two timestamps are set to the same exact value (including the milliseconds) how are they different in SQL I have two SQL servers with similar set-ups, but in one there are two timestamp fields that are set to the exact same value - 5/29/2014 11:35:08. The other has them set to 5/29/2014 11:35:08.10. How is this possible and how can I make them different? A: The SQL Server date/time type only stores date/time values, not fractions of a second. You are probably comparing the same two times (as an example, 11:35:08.10 and 11:35:08.15), but you are not comparing the dates, just the times.
