Murine cells that are lethally irradiated and then treated with r-interferon (r-IFN) readily develop properties of transformed cells. Murine L-cells were found to be induced to synthesize and secrete a novel glycoprotein tumor marker, designated CEA' (carcinoembryonic antigen'). CEA' was identified by the comparative electrophoretic analysis of radiolabelled in vitro translation products of L-cell mRNAs and the electrophoretic analysis of cellular extracts. The synthesis and secretion of CEA' was enhanced by incubation of the cells with r-IFN, and the in vitro production of CEA' was dependent on the presence of r-IFN. Thus, the CEA''synthesized in vitro was similar to CEA' synthesized by L-cell lines established in vitro from lethally irradiated mice treated in vivo with r-IFN. The similar behavior of CEA' produced in vitro and in vivo suggests that L-cell populations from lethally irradiated mice treated with r-IFN are neoplastically transformed. These findings provide a model for studying how IFN-induced transformation might be applied to therapies of human cancer.Q: What is the easiest way to implement conditional probability? I have three symbols 0, 1, and 2. They can be copied to one another, and I can switch to a new document if a certain number of them are present. What I am doing at the moment is erasing the previous document and then copying a new one to the current one. That's fine, but I would like to have a procedure for multiplying symbols in a certain way that will affect future documents, depending on the state of the previous document. E.g. if there are three of each symbol, the next document will look like 300001020, if there are four of each, it will look like 300002010, etc. Is there a general way to do this? A: Multiply each symbol by the number of times it appears in the previous document. If it's zero, 82138339de
