A: No, you can't do it. How to Fix the Gas Leak and Drain in a Garage Gas leaks are a common problem in garages. There are many different reasons why this happens, from a leaky hose to a blocked vent to a damaged gas line. Although you can't see it, gas can cause serious damage to your home if it's left to leak. How to Tell if It's Time to Repair Your Gas Leak If you suspect that your garage has a gas leak, it's probably a good idea to call your local plumber. Make sure to get a report for evidence. At the very least, you'll want a professional on site to take measurements and confirm the amount of gas that's in the house. Once a leak is detected, there are several different ways that you can fix the problem. The first step in repairing a gas leak involves sealing the damaged area of the vent so that the gas is no longer able to leak out of it. A professional should be able to make the necessary repairs to your vent so that no more gas can leak from it. Depending on how severe a gas leak is, you might need to have your gas line replaced. If your home is particularly old, you might want to have the entire structure of the house inspected for leaks. And if you have a particularly large gas line, it might be possible to have it replaced entirely with a new one. If you suspect that it's too much for your budget or your skill level, you might want to bring in a professional to inspect your gas line and consider your options. Why Garage Plumbers Shouldn't Consider Your Home Insurance If you plan to hire a professional, you should make sure that they are certified by the North American Board of Plumbing Examiners. This is a private organization that certifies plumbers. They can tell you if a plumber has the expertise to complete your work and give you an assessment of the bill that they're likely to charge. Because they don't make money from the jobs that they take, they won't be paid for their time. Some gas leak and drain repair services will include installation or repair of a new gas line, but these are not typically fixed by home insurance. A reliable plumber will be able to make repairs without the help of a repairman 3da54e8ca3
