the poorest people in the world from the effects of climate change, a new report has revealed. The Guardian has analysed the latest figures and found that British aid still accounted for a tiny percentage of the total given by rich countries but has contributed more than all other net donors put together. Between 2015 and 2017, Britain gave aid worth £4.1bn, and the total contribution from all the other major donors – including the US, the EU, Japan, Saudi Arabia, and China – was £8.3bn. Total foreign aid amounted to £24.4bn over the same period. Some of the poorest countries in the world, including those affected by the Syrian war and Boko Haram, receive as little as £1.6bn in aid annually. The bottom 10 recipients by income received 7,800 people. The top 10 received 74,000 people. In contrast, Britain and the US, both of which have the biggest budgets, spent the most: $34.5bn in the US and £12bn in Britain. Three of the richest countries – the UK, US, and Switzerland – account for more than two-thirds of foreign aid spending. The UK's aid budget is not low by international standards. Britain spent $11.6bn on aid in 2016, less than the $11.7bn spent by the US, but still more than the $9.7bn spent by the poorest five-year group of recipient countries, represented by Sierra Leone, Haiti, Malawi, Cambodia, and Niger. However, it was dwarfed by the $62bn given by the richest 30 countries to the poorest group, which included countries such as Syria, Pakistan, Afghanistan, Yemen, and Democratic Republic of the Congo. The three richest countries also spent more than the $22bn the poorest group received in aid. The poorest group received about $60,000 each, the top three received $9.6bn, and the top 10 received $3.9bn. The poorest countries were given £5bn in aid, more than the total aid given to the 10 richest countries put together. The UK government said it provided £23bn in humanitarian aid, but this includes about £4bn for British overseas development assistance. The UN says the total value of humanitarian aid was $125.3bn (£100bn) in 2015 and $126.
