It is now fully compatible with the Mac OS X operating system, uses an updated user interface, and includes a 20% reduction in system requirements. Math Cubed is a math problem game that challenges math problems on your PC. You can choose from three levels of problem solving. The more challenging questions are presented as puzzles. You can use your mouse to drag the graphing calculator over the problem, and click on the (on-screen) box that represents a "point". When you click on a point, you get the answer by checking the problem. You can stop at any point and change your answer if you get stuck. If you want, you can solve two problems at once, and solve only the easiest problem after one or more correct answers. The more difficult problems are solved by a computer. Once you get all the answers correct, you will be presented with a list of answers. If you check the box next to each of these, you can then see the answers and check them. To play the game, you don't have to do a lot more than put the graphing calculator away, bring up a program, and try the puzzles. Of course, with Math Cubed, the puzzles are created to be challenging, but you will have some intuition for what the problem is before you start solving. Developed by IBM, Math Cubed is a tool for anyone who needs to learn the essentials of mathematics. What's new in this version: • New user interface (a nicer look with higher resolution graphics, plus a slide-show screen on startup) • Support for fullscreen mode (when playing games at full-screen size, your screen will be black) • Support for the Mac OS X operating system (problems appear in a new screen, and are no longer masked with a black background) •
