A federal district court in San Francisco ordered the college and its former admissions officer, Lori Loughlin, to attend a hearing scheduled for Wednesday at the U.S. District Court in San Jose. Loughlin, who lives in Palo Alto, and the college were indicted in March along with 13 others for participating in a scheme to pay off a proctor of a college entrance exam in exchange for the athlete's daughter's admission to the University of Southern California.

Prosecutors said the scheme was designed to allow the family to boost its daughter's admissions into the university. U.S. District Judge Indira Talwani agreed last month to delay the criminal trial against the Loughlins, actors Felicity Huffman and husband William H. Macy, and 13 others, ruling that it would be "inappropriate" for them to stand trial before the case resolved in Santa Clara.

In July 2018, Loughlin — one of the stars of the ABC series "Full House" — and her fashion designer husband were arrested and charged with a single count of conspiracy to commit racketeering for allegedly paying $500,000 in bribes to get her daughters into the university in exchange for getting the younger daughter into the University of Southern California. The mother-daughter duo has been released on bail. Families of other students, including the older daughter, are pursuing civil actions against the university and Loughlin. Loughlin is a native of Mill Valley and attended the state university. She is a fashion designer and a co-founder of the fashion company
