Influence of the medium on the frequency of mutations in myelodysplastic syndrome. Myelodysplastic syndrome (MDS) is commonly diagnosed in a poor prognosis phase. Several factors contribute to the progression of MDS and subsequent evolution toward AML. These factors include growth-promoting factors, such as cytokines, and/or intracellular mutations. The authors measured the frequency of mutations of platelets or megakaryocytes (MKs) in MDS patients to study the impact of the hematopoietic microenvironment on these mutations 595f342e71
