D!akov, Nitro Pro 9.5.2.29 (preactivated) RePack By D!akovIt has been nearly four months since the 2017 NFL season was canceled due to the coronavirus outbreak. But some are still missing their offseason workouts and training camp practices. According to a league source, Seahawks wide receiver John Ross is in the concussion protocol. However, he should be cleared to practice by next week. Ross hasn't been cleared to practice during the offseason or early in training camp. The 2019 second-round pick has missed about a month of practice time, including a three-game absence last month. Ross hasn't participated in team drills since early June and was limited to individual drills during the team's minicamp in late July. He had been working to get back on the field, adding running and catching routes during practice. It's been a slow process for Ross, but he appears close to being 100 percent. The 2017 NFL Offensive Rookie of the Year led the Seahawks with 95 receptions last season. He also had 700 yards receiving and five touchdowns. The 23-year-old Ross was selected No. 23 overall in the 2017 NFL Draft. He missed the first 10 games of his rookie season due to a broken fibula. The injury occurred when Ross crashed to the ground in a game on Oct. 24, 2017. Ross missed his rookie training camp in 2018, sitting out due to a contract holdout. He then missed the season opener due to the injury. As a rookie, Ross played in 14 games with seven starts and caught 64 passes for 828 yards (13.4 average) and five touchdowns. He was also named the NFL's Offensive Rookie of the Year.ok}} , D. M., [Perrodin]}}, D., [Pohl]}}, M., [Luginbuhl]}}, C., [Nordlund]}}, [Å]}},. & [Stamm]}}, [Ø]}},. 2009,, 505, 339 , W.
