Funding Scorecard Note: Scores are calculated based on the unique strengths of each company..Date: December 1, 1999 For immediate release The U.S. Energy Information Administration today released its Short Term Energy Outlook (STEO). The STEO is the most widely used tool for forecasting short-term energy and electricity price and supply developments for the continental United States, including Alaska, Hawaii, and the territories. The forecast for 2000 states that electricity rates and household electricity use will be only a little higher than current levels in early 2001, and natural gas prices will be little lower. The STEO's forecast for the first three quarters of 2000 is based on assumptions about the balance of supply and demand in the electricity market, projected natural gas demand, and the strength of the economy. The projection of electricity prices assumes that demand for electricity is relatively constant, that prices will not change substantially by the end of 2000, and that deregulation will work as expected. The STEO forecasts the return of electricity conservation and conservation measures (e.g., the phase-in of new and improved appliances and equipment) to offset the planned increases in electricity consumption, primarily from the growth in the use of computers. According to the projections in the STEO, electricity prices are expected to be moderate through the end of 2000. Electricity rates will be about 7 cents per kWh during the first part of the year, falling to 6.7 cents by the middle of 2001 and to 6.4 cents by the end of the year. Relatively moderate electricity rates are expected in most regions, with the Midwest and West projected to have the highest rates and the Southeast and Northeast the lowest rates. As expected, natural gas prices are projected to be somewhat lower throughout the year, but still well above $6/MMBtu. The STEO projects that spot natural gas prices will average at least $5.50/MMBtu through the middle of 2000. The low prices reflect the expectation that demand for natural gas will continue to increase throughout the year, and a growing supply of natural gas coupled with the high prices for non-traditional fuels such as coal have largely decreased the price advantage of natural gas.
